❖ 语言学概念

• 高语境文化 (High-context culture):

A culture in which communication relies heavily on the surrounding context, non-verbal cues, and implicit messages. In high-context cultures, much of the information is understood without being directly stated. Examples include Japan and many Arab cultures.

• 低语境文化 (Low-context culture):

A culture in which communication is explicit, direct, and relies heavily on spoken or written words. In low-context cultures, people tend to provide detailed information to avoid misunderstanding. Examples include the United States and Germany.

• 显性语码 (Explicit code):

A communication style where the meaning is clearly stated and unambiguous, with little reliance on context or non-verbal cues. This is often associated with low-context cultures where precise language is preferred.

• 隐性语境 (Implicit context):

A communication style where much of the meaning is derived from the context, body language, or shared knowledge, rather than from direct statements. This style is common in high-context cultures, where understanding depends on subtle cues.

• 跨文化交际 (Intercultural communication):

The process of communication between individuals or groups from different cultural backgrounds. It involves navigating cultural differences in language, gestures, values, and expectations to ensure effective interaction.

• 交际责任 (Communicative responsibility):

The idea that participants in a conversation share the responsibility for ensuring mutual understanding. This includes adapting language use, being clear, and interpreting messages accurately based on the context and relationship.

• 语气 (Tone):

The speaker's attitude or emotional quality expressed through the choice of words and phrasing in communication. For example, a sentence can have a friendly, formal, or sarcastic tone depending on how it is delivered.

• 语调 (Intonation):

The variation in pitch during speech that can convey different meanings, emotions, or emphases. Intonation plays a crucial role in distinguishing questions from statements, or in signaling surprise, doubt, or affirmation.
